Dear Sonalli Abraham,

I am writing about the E-Commerce Manager opening for your fashion portfolio in Dubai. It reads like the role I have been building towards: owning an online channel end-to-end, across both a DTC store and a set of marketplaces, for more than one brand at a time.

At DoFreeze in Dubai I own the DTC Shopify store end-to-end — catalogue and product content, collections and category pages, cross-sell, discounting and checkout — with conversion rate and average order value as my KPIs, and I run the brands' presence across Noon, Talabat, Careem and Deliveroo, managing listings, pricing, promotional mechanics and price parity platform by platform. I govern the A&P and trade budget, steer Meta and Google Ads against ROAS and acquisition-cost targets, and work with supply chain and logistics on stock availability and allocation so the channels do not run dry. I also lead a team of two and am used to being the person who has to prioritise across brands and platforms when everything is urgent.

Before Dubai I spent two years inside a marketplace rather than selling on one: as Key Account Manager at Miravia (Alibaba Group) I managed the commercial performance of 42 beauty, fragrance and fashion accounts — pricing, assortment, listing quality, promotional participation and account health — growing GMV +30% quarter on quarter, and I owned the Flash Sales channel for Beauty, Fashion & Home against P&L targets, reporting to the CEO. That perspective is useful on the other side of the table: I know what makes a listing win visibility and what gets it suppressed. On the AI point in your brief, this is genuinely how I work — I built a Claude-based system that automates listing and content optimisation, campaign planning and KPI reporting across markets, cutting manual workload by around 40%.

To be straightforward: I have five years of experience rather than six to ten, my team today is two people rather than four, and my P&L accountability has been at channel and budget level rather than full DTC P&L ownership. What I bring instead is an unusually complete hands-on span — DTC trading, marketplace operations, digital merchandising, paid media and stock coordination — in this market, already living in Dubai. I would welcome the chance to talk it through.

Best regards,

Paula De Francisco Pérez
