

12 August 2026

Dear Hiring Manager,

Deliveroo's brand is one I already work with every week — from the other side of the marketplace, merchandising and activating FMCG brands on your quick-commerce shelf in the UAE. So the Marketing Manager, Brand role in the Middle East team is the exact intersection I've been building toward: the craft of building a loved, trusted brand, on a delivery platform I know from the inside, in the UAE and Kuwait markets I live and work in.

What this role asks for is what I do now. As Brand & Marketing Manager at DoFreeze I own integrated campaigns end-to-end across the UAE and 50+ GCC/MENA markets — from insight-led brief to on-time, on-budget delivery — as the project lead who sets timelines, aligns contributors and holds accountability. I write the creative briefs and run feedback and approvals with agencies, creative teams and 25–50 influencers per campaign; I own the A&P budget; and I track KPIs into post-campaign reporting (ROI, ROAS, sell-out) that shapes the next brief. Before this, at Alibaba's Miravia I built integrated brand campaigns like Beauty Club and Hot on Social from scratch and grew 42 accounts +30% GMV QoQ, reporting to the CEO — and at Glovo I ran bespoke activations on a delivery platform much like Deliveroo's.

Two things make me a strong fit beyond the checklist. First, I'm genuinely native to this world — Deliveroo, talabat, Noon and Careem on the delivery side, and the UAE/Kuwait cultural calendar (Ramadan, Eid, National Days) that shapes when and how campaigns land — plus I'm AI-native, building generative-AI tooling that makes briefing, research and reporting faster. Second, I'm already in Dubai on a residence visa, so I can start with zero relocation. I'll be candid about one thing: I have 4+ years of experience rather than the 6–8 in the posting — but those years are unusually broad and delivery-dense, spanning exactly the brand-meets-quick-commerce space this role lives in, and I'd back my campaign portfolio against that gap any day.

I'd love to show the Middle East Marketing team how I'd approach an integrated campaign for the UAE and Kuwait — from brief to the post-campaign read. I'm based in Dubai and available immediately. Thank you for considering my application.

Best regards,

Paula De Francisco Pérez

+971 50 386 3656 | paulich98@hotmail.com