Dear Kartik Kulshrestha,

I am applying for the WINNERSHIP E-Commerce Intern role in Beiersdorf's Middle East team, and I know it is an unusual application: I have five years in e-commerce and FMCG, and today I am Brand & Marketing Manager at DoFreeze in Dubai. I am applying because I want to work on NIVEA, Eucerin and Hansaplast from inside your e-commerce team, and because most of what you describe (content, promotions and weekly tracking on Noon and talabat) is already part of my week.

At DoFreeze I look after three brands on talabat, Noon and Careem: SKU onboarding, product content and images, pricing and promotional mechanics, planned on a seasonal calendar. I measure every activation on sales. When we launched SMASH on talabat, daily sales rose 165% while a brand we left out of the campaign grew 4.7%; Befit's "New Year, New Me" event on Noon added 4,176 incremental units, 31% over baseline. Every week I review stock risk by dark store with an AI dashboard we built, checking whether platform orders cover demand, and I plan our Meta and Google Ads against ROI and ROAS.

I have also seen NIVEA from the retailer side: at Miravia (Alibaba) I managed the account for three months, one of 42 beauty, fragrance and fashion brands whose promotions, pricing and assortment I planned, growing GMV 30% quarter on quarter across the portfolio. My habit of reading the numbers first comes from category planning at Mondelez, where I measured sell-in, sell-out and promotional effectiveness. What I would learn with you is just as clear: I have not worked with Amazon or Carrefour, and I have not yet managed A+ content, keyword tagging or retailer SEO. Those are the skills I want this programme to give me.

I am based in Dubai and would welcome a conversation about how I could contribute from the first week, and about the practical side of a six-month programme. Thank you for your consideration.

Best regards,

Paula De Francisco Pérez
