Dear Hiring Manager,

When I put creators behind SMASH on talabat, I kept Befit out of the campaign on the same platform and in the same window, so we could see what the campaign alone had done. Daily sales rose 165% against 4.7% for the control. That habit of testing, measuring and moving money to what works is why I am applying for the Senior Brand Manager role, and I would like to bring it to a breakfast cereals portfolio with the reach of NESQUIK, FITNESS and CHEERIOS.

At DoFreeze in Dubai I lead brand and marketing for three food brands, Befit, Eurocake and Flair, sold in more than 50 markets. I own the annual activation calendar, built around the moments when our consumers buy: Ramadan, back to school, Fitness Month and New Year. I have taken six products to market end-to-end, from the brief and packaging to pricing and launch, and I plan each one with sales and our distributors channel by channel, across modern trade, quick-commerce and our own online store. I write the creative briefs for my team of two, a designer and a social media executive, and for four external agencies. Across three creator campaigns I negotiated 30% off and received 103 activations against 75 contracted.

On Noon, our "New Year, New Me" campaign for Befit delivered 4,176 incremental units, 31% over baseline. When an agency's report estimated reach from follower counts and counted the same creator twice across waves, I rebuilt the KPI definitions and found that creators under 20K followers were performing 10 to 40 times above the campaign average. I also built an AI workflow with Claude for planning, content and reporting that cut our manual work by about 40%. My FMCG grounding comes from category planning at Mondelez with Nielsen data, and I know the customer side from 42 brand accounts at Miravia (Alibaba) and XL accounts at Glovo.

I want to be direct about where this role would stretch me. My media work is digital, creators and sampling rather than TV or other ATL campaigns, and I run export markets from a central team rather than leading brands with local teams across MENA. Those are the parts I would expect to learn from your agencies and markets. The activation calendar, the launch pipeline and the test-and-learn discipline I can bring from the first week. I am based in Dubai and would welcome a conversation. Thank you for your consideration.

Best regards,

Paula De Francisco Pérez
