Dear Hiring Manager,

Every week in Dubai I sell the same FMCG brands through three different kinds of e-commerce: quick commerce on talabat and Careem, a pure play on Noon, and our own Shopify store. Each one needs a different mix of price, promotion, content and stock, and getting that mix right is the part of e-commerce I enjoy most. It is why I am applying for the Ecommerce Manager MENA role, where channel mix sits at the centre of the strategy.

At DoFreeze I manage three brands, Befit, Eurocake and Flair, on those platforms: listings, pricing, promotional mechanics and joint activations such as a purchase-linked cashback giveaway with talabat. When we launched SMASH on talabat, I kept another brand out of the campaign as a control, and daily sales rose 165% against 4.7%. On Noon, our "New Year, New Me" event for Befit added 4,176 incremental units, 31% over baseline. I run a weekly stock-risk review by dark store, contribute to the monthly sell-in forecast, write the channel plans our distributors use in more than 50 markets, and lead a team of two and four agencies.

I also know the retailer's side of the negotiation. At Miravia (Alibaba) I managed 42 beauty and fragrance accounts, including KIKO Milano, growing GMV 30% quarter on quarter, and onboarded more than 30 new stores in two months. I ran the Flash Sales channel against P&L targets, reporting to the CEO, and before that I negotiated commercial terms with XL accounts such as KFC and Taco Bell at Glovo. My FMCG grounding comes from category planning at Mondelez.

I want to be direct: this role asks for more than twelve years and ownership of a regional P&L, and I have five years and have not yet led managers. If the team decides it needs that level of experience, I would be glad to be considered for the eCommerce Operations Manager, Gulf role you plan to add, which is very close to what I do today. I am based in Dubai and would welcome a conversation. Thank you for your consideration.

Best regards,

Paula De Francisco Pérez
