Dear Hiring Manager,

talabat's brand has to win over three groups: customers, employees and vendors. I belong to the third. As Brand & Marketing Manager at DoFreeze in Dubai I run campaigns on talabat for Befit, Eurocake and SMASH, and before that I worked at Glovo inside the Delivery Hero group. I am applying for the Brand Manager role in your Regional Brand team because the work you describe, an occasion-led brand system, partnerships chosen for audience fit and proof that brand work converts, is what I already do on a smaller scale.

Our year is planned around occasions: Fitness Month in November, New Year New Me in January, Ramadan and back to school. Every campaign, creator wave, sampling and partnership hangs off that calendar. I pick partners for the audience they bring. With talabat we ran an in-app giveaway where each purchase earned an entry to win talabat cashback cards, plus seasonal samplings, and we work with running, padel and yoga communities that bring their own people and their own content. I then measure the result in sales rather than reach. For SMASH on talabat I used Befit as a control brand on the same platform and dates: daily sales rose 165%, against 4.7% for the control. On Noon, New Year New Me added 4,176 incremental units, 31% over baseline.

AI is how my team of two, a designer and a social media executive, keeps up. I built a Claude-based system for campaign planning, content, market research and reporting that cut our manual work by about 40%. When inbound requests to work with Befit kept growing, I set up an affiliate programme with a landing page built by AI agents and an AI avatar that explains the content brief in several languages, so every creator receives the same guidance. Your role asks for the same thing for markets and agencies, at a much larger size. My range across categories comes from chocolate at Mondelez; beauty, fragrance and fashion at Miravia (Alibaba), where I created the Beauty Club and Hot on Social projects and reported Flash Sales to the CEO; and food delivery at Glovo.

Two gaps are worth stating plainly: I have five years of experience rather than eight, and I speak English and Spanish but not Arabic. What I would bring is a vendor's view of the talabat brand, the habit of tying brand work to sales, and a team that already uses AI every day. I am based in Dubai on a UAE employment visa sponsored by my current employer, and I would welcome the chance to talk. Thank you for your consideration.

Best regards,

Paula De Francisco Pérez
