Dear Hiring Manager,

talabat Beauty is the rare thing I look for: a true 0→1 venture — the first quick-commerce beauty destination in MENA — built inside a profitable, scaled platform. I already work with talabat every week from the other side of the marketplace, listing and merchandising FMCG brands on your q-commerce shelf, so I know both the platform and how differently beauty behaves from food and grocery.

I come to product from the category and commerce side — which this role explicitly values ("think like a category manager as much as a PM"). At Glovo I helped build the Retail vertical from 0→1, taking a food-delivery platform into beauty and non-food — the same shape as talabat Beauty. At Miravia/AliExpress I owned the Beauty & Fragrances category across 42 accounts (+30% GMV QoQ), curated assortment and hero products, and launched Beauty Club and Hot on Social from zero — brand-led, content-heavy destinations built around discovery and re-purchase. Today at DoFreeze I own a Shopify shopping experience end-to-end, from discovery to re-buy.

Two things set me apart for this venture. First, I'm AI-native as a builder: I designed and vibe-coded a generative-AI system (Claude/GPT) that prototypes campaigns, research and content and raises my team's AI literacy — the builder-and-product-thinker profile you describe. Second, I bring hands-on MENA depth — talabat, Noon, Careem and Deliveroo on the q-commerce side; Arabian Oud, Lattafa and Swiss Arabian on the beauty side — and I'm already in Dubai on a residence visa, so I can start with zero relocation. I'll be candid: my last four years are in category, e-commerce and brand rather than a formal PM title — but the work (0→1 launches, owning a shopping experience, discovery and merchandising, shipping under ambiguity) is the substance of this role.

I'd love to walk the Beauty Venture team through how I'd approach discovery, assortment and the first-impression experience for MENA beauty shoppers. I'm based in Dubai and available immediately — thank you for considering my application.

Best regards,

Paula De Francisco Pérez
