Dear Hiring Manager,

NesTalent's mission — developing Nestlé MENA's future marketing leaders through real work on brand innovation, engaging brand experiences and consumer insights — speaks directly to what I love most about this craft. I'm applying with genuine intent and full transparency: I already have a few years in marketing rather than coming straight out of university, and I've thought hard about why a structured graduate programme at Nestlé is exactly where I want to build the next decade of my career.

My foundation is squarely in marketing. I hold a Business Administration degree from CUNEF with an e-commerce and marketing focus and a 9.5/10 thesis, and I began my career on a graduate-style trainee programme at a global FMCG leader (Mondelez), where I learned brand, category and consumer fundamentals inside a large multi-functional organisation and supported NPD launches such as Milka Spread. Since then I've stayed close to the streams NesTalent names: brand building and go-to-market, creating engaging brand experiences (influencer and social campaigns), and turning consumer insights into product and campaign decisions — always collaborating across functions and thriving in fast-moving environments. I'm fluent in English, deeply curious, and a genuinely fast learner (I even built an AI system to speed up my own research and reporting).

Let me be candid about the obvious: I bring more hands-on experience than a typical fresh graduate, and I want to be upfront about that rather than pretend otherwise. What draws me to NesTalent specifically is the chance to master big-brand marketing at Nestlé's scale and rigour — world-class categories, structured rotations, and mentoring from senior leaders — inside a company where I can grow long-term as a future leader. I'd bring real commercial hustle and launch experience to the cohort from day one while learning the Nestlé way properly. I'm based in Dubai and would relish the breadth and pace the rotations offer across MENA.

I'd welcome the chance to talk through how I'd contribute to a rotation team and why I'm choosing to invest in Nestlé's development path deliberately. Thank you for considering an application that doesn't fit the usual mould — I'm confident my passion for marketing, curiosity and drive make me a strong fit for what NesTalent is really trying to build. I look forward to hearing from you.

Best regards,

Paula De Francisco Pérez
