Dear Marina Tereshina,

Gold Apple's rise from Russia's #1 beauty retailer to an omnichannel destination now expanding across the UAE, Qatar and Saudi Arabia — doubling its brand portfolio by sourcing fresh names from Korea and Japan, with e-commerce already driving over half of revenue — is exactly the kind of beauty business I want to help build. The Category Manager role caught my attention because it asks for what I do: own a beauty category end-to-end, onboard and negotiate with brands and suppliers, and turn assortment, pricing, margin and the promotional calendar into category growth.

Beauty category and commercial work is the spine of my career. At Alibaba's Miravia I owned the Beauty & Fragrances category across 42 accounts and grew GMV +30% QoQ through assortment optimisation, pricing, margin management and a data-led promotional calendar — and, as PIC Fragrances, I identified, onboarded and negotiated commercial terms with 30+ new brands and stores in just two months, including the official distributors of leading Arabian and oud houses. My category grounding at Mondelez (sell-in/sell-out, Nielsen, promo effectiveness and assortment-gap analysis) means reading sales and margin data to steer a range is second nature, and at DoFreeze I now run assortment, distributor negotiation and an end-to-end Shopify e-commerce store across the UAE and 50+ markets.

Two things set me apart. First, I am already in Dubai on a UAE residence visa and operating across UAE beauty/FMCG retail and quick-commerce (Noon, Talabat, Careem, Deliveroo) with a genuine omnichannel view — no relocation timeline. Second, I lead with category- and margin-led value, not just top-line. I'll be candid that my category depth has been in fragrances and multibrand beauty/fashion rather than K-beauty specifically, and I don't yet speak Korean — but I ramp fast on a category, I'm genuinely excited by K-beauty's momentum in the region, and I already speak the language of assortment, supplier onboarding, margin and promotional planning that the role runs on.

I would love to bring this blend of beauty-category ownership, supplier negotiation and data-led assortment to Gold Apple's K-beauty growth in the GCC. I am based in Dubai, available to start immediately, and would welcome the chance to discuss how I would develop the category, onboard new brands and manage assortment, pricing and margin. Thank you for your consideration — I look forward to hearing from you.

Best regards,

Paula De Francisco Pérez
