

Byredo UAE — Retail & Clienteling Lens

Three observations on growing a niche luxury fragrance house across UAE doors, from a fragrance-category specialist.

Prepared by Paula De Francisco Pérez · 19 June 2026 · For: Retail Manager - Byredo at Puig

1. Clienteling as the growth engine, not a nicety

Finding: Niche luxury fragrance lives on a small base of high-value, repeat clients — yet store-level clienteling is often inconsistent across doors.

Insight: A segmented, CRM-led client base compounds: it lifts repeat purchase, average spend and lifetime value far more than footfall alone.

Recommendation: Standardise a clienteling playbook across doors (segmented database, follow-up cadence, fragrance-profiling rituals) — exactly the approach behind the Beauty Club clienteling programme I built at Miravia.

2. Fragrance profiling as the service differentiator

Finding: In niche fragrance, the in-store scent-discovery experience is the brand — but service consistency varies by associate and door.

Insight: Elevating and standardising fragrance profiling turns a browse into an emotional, high-conversion experience that justifies the premium.

Recommendation: Codify a fragrance-profiling service standard and coach teams to it, with flagships as the benchmark — drawing on my fragrance-category expertise as PIC Fragrances — including leading Arabian & oud houses (Arabian Oud, Lattafa, Swiss Arabian, Ajmal) — and Inditex luxury-service training.

3. Retail + wholesale doors as one commercial P&L

Finding: Performance across retail and wholesale doors is easier to manage when read as one commercial picture against margin and EBITDA, not door-by-door in isolation.

Insight: A single opportunity-driven view surfaces where assortment, pricing and activation should shift to protect profitability and growth.

Recommendation: Run a unified KPI scorecard across doors (sell-through, conversion, basket, margin) and re-cut activation by opportunity — the commercial/P&L discipline I applied owning the Flash Sales channel and 42 accounts at Miravia.

These are outside-in observations from a fragrance specialist who admires the brand; with Byredo's door-level data I'd sharpen them quickly. They reflect how I'd approach the role — clienteling-led growth, elevated fragrance service, and one commercial view across doors.
